Cabrera Holding Out On Armory

By KATE PASTOR

Councilman Fernando Cabrera, a pastor whose church and condo are just a few blocks from the Kingsbridge Armory, is holding out his final blessing of a new ice sports complex proposed to fill the long-vacant, historic building.

The City Planning Commission approved the Kingsbridge National Ice Center last week, leaving City Council approval and signage by the mayor the only hurdles left before KNIC can turn the Kingsbridge Armory into the largest skating arena in the country. Traditionally, the council defers to local members when deciding how to vote on big development projects, meaning Cabrera’s support hangs in the balance.

“[Cabrera] was constantly moving the goalpost as to what was required for him to support the project.”

After the planning commission vote, Cabrera’s support was conspicuously absent from a press release sent out by Bronx Borough President Ruben Diaz Jr., who has pledged his unyielding support since the proposal became public. The release featured several prominent officials praising the project, but Cabrera was quiet and could not be reached for comment.

But his chief-of-staff, Greg Faulkner, said community concerns over traffic, parking and other community issues that come with bringing 5,000 people to an arena have “gotten louder,” with 100 letters submitted to Community Board 7. The ice center, which will feature nine full-sized rinks, is expected to bring in a million visitors a year.

But two political insiders who did not want to be named because they want to see the deal go through say Cabrera’s case of cold feet has more to do with jockeying for power — something he’s been doing throughout the Community Benefits Agreement process.

“He was constantly moving the goalpost as to what was required for him to support the project,” one of them said.

Four sources, including two directly involved with CBA negotiations between the developer and 27 community organizations represented by the Kingsbridge Armory Redevelopment Alliance, said that after the deal was agreed upon, Cabrera tried to get KNIC to funnel $100,000 annually for

Andrew Cohen To Be ‘Hands On’ City Council Member

By HAYDEE CAMACHO

Newly-elected District 11 City Council member Andrew Cohen has already begun making his presence known in the district. “I attended a meeting last night in Bedford Park where there might have been about a dozen people,” he said in an interview at the no-frills office of the Benjamin Franklin Democratic Reform Club on 231st Street in Riverdale. “I think people will appreciate that their City Council person is accessible.”

As he looks forward to beginning his first public office position — representing Norwood, Riverdale, Bedford Park and parts of Kingsbridge, Woodlawn and Wakefield — Cohen says his main focus will be helping solve day-to-day problems and working to improve quality of life.

“I want to make the city relevant in people’s individual lives in solving problems,” he said. “People are very concerned about their block, their street, their schools. I want to provide a high level of constituent service and make sure that myself and my office are easily accessible.”

Cohen attributes his affinity for hands-on public service to growing up in the Rockaway area of Queens. “Coming from a tight knit community, that helped me form deep attachments.” He said many childhood and school friends volunteered for his campaign.

Growing up, former New York City Mayor Ed Koch made a lasting impression on him. “I knew about President Ford, but the first politician I really remember is Ed Koch,” he recalled. “There was something about him that was so in people’s lives. He made me realize the role that politicians and government can play in terms of the connection to people.”

Cohen graduated from SUNY New Paltz in 1992 and Cardozo School of Law, Yeshiva University, in 1997. He had a fledgling interest in law and politics, which was solidified working as a court attorney to Bronx Supreme Court Justice Edgar Walker.

Cohen said the negotiation skills he learned as a court at-

NCBH to Reopen Labor and Delivery Unit

Following two months of public outcry and visible pressure from local residents, unions and healthcare advocates, North Central Bronx Hospital announced it was planning to reopen its labor and delivery department sometime next year.

The Health and Hospitals Corporation, which operates NCBH, shuttered the hospital's labor and delivery department in August, saying it was consolidating services at one of its other institutions, Jacobi Hospital.

Last week, the corporation announced the appointment of Michael Zinaman, M.D. as chairman of the HHC North Bronx Healthcare Network's Obstetrics and Gynecology (GYN) Department and at the same time announced the reopening of NCBH's labor and delivery services.

"With Dr. Zinaman's leadership, we will step up recruitment efforts for other outstanding physicians and are confident we will have a plan in place to reopen a safe and efficient maternity service at North Central Bronx Hospital," said William Walsh, Sr. Vice President of the HHC North Bronx Healthcare Network, which includes Jacobi, NCB Hospital and the Health Centers at Tremont and Gun Hill.

Local residents are pleased, but remain skeptical, said Eileen Markey, an activist with Community Power North Bronx, which organized a handful of vigils and rallies to protest the HHC's decision in August.

"It's good to hear that HHC is talking about returning the labor and delivery services they hastily withdrew in August. But this isn't good enough," Markey said in an email. "The people who rely on NCB demand a return to the award-winning, evidence-based midwifery model of care, meaningful community participation in this and future decisions impacting our public hospital, and solution to the problem of staff retention at Jacobi Medical Center that precipitated this crisis."

Cohen To Be 'Hands On' Council Member

torney will help him be an effective council member and his legal training will assist him in writing legislation.

Cohen also taught at John Jay College of Criminal Justice. He served on the Board of Directors of Friends of Van Cortlandt Park and was the Chair of the Aging Committee on Community Board 8. He has been married to Dr. Heather Erhard since 2000. He said their five year old daughter, Sarah, was "very helpful on the campaign."

While he learned much about his constituents' concerns on the campaign trail, he also gained some insights about himself. "I wasn't the kind of person who randomly struck up conversations with people and now I'm just the opposite," he said. "Even now, I don't usually offer my opinion in my day-to-day life unless someone asks me to. Generally speaking, I'm not the kind of person who's going to stick in their two cents uninvited, but I don't know if that's a feature I'll be able to keep up."

Cohen ran a rigorous campaign and won nearly 80 percent of the vote. He attributed much of his success to his wife, saying "I give her all the credit in this."

Voters sent 21 new members to the City Council in the recent election. In January, for the first time in two decades, Democrats will control both the mayoral and legislative branches of the city government.

"We have a new administration, we'll have a new speaker and the economy is on the mend which hopefully will give us the revenue to do what we want to do," he said. "As a Democrat and a progressive, I'm very excited to help the mayor meet his agenda."

He noted that while the city has done well under Mayor Bloomberg, "there are a lot of things we can do better." "I share in de Blasio's vision. I think his success will be the Council's success.

Cohen sees his role in the City Council as going beyond writing new legislation to also embracing grass-root involvement. "I'm going to be out here. There is really no other way other than just presenting myself and really being involved. Hopefully being present, that might motivate people to join me."

Building community partnerships will be key. "I may be able to get resources from City Hall. I might be able to make some legislative change that may have some impact on the community," he said. "But I can't make change in the community without partnerships. We have a lot of great organizations and institutions here."

Following last week's general election of a new mayor in Democrat Bill de Blasio, we asked readers for their reaction.

It's great that Mayor (Michael) Bloomberg is out. We will have better opportunities with Bill de Blasio. My main concern is that he can work out the different contracts with the unions.
Luis Mendez

First of all Mr. Bloomberg, thank you for robbing us and stripping us of our rights. Good luck and adios amigo. Now get lost, thank you.
Tyrone Cofer

I just want to say I'm glad that Mr. Bloomberg is kicking rocks and adios.
Jamel Burney

Later Bloomberg, hellooooo de Blasio. Bloomberg did his thing, but hopefully this will stimulate our economy here in the Bronx.
Maurice James Reyes I

I hope that Mr. de Blasio can do something about inflation and lower the rents and help the poor with more jobs. Yes, de Blasio has the strength to do it.

Police Report

Police Investigating Senior's Death

By DAVID GREENE

Detectives are currently investigating the suspicious death of an elderly patient at a Norwood nursing home.

Police say that officers from the 52nd Precinct were called to the Bainbridge Nursing and Rehabilitation Center at 3518 Bainbridge Ave., at just after 8 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 1. Offering few details, investigators would only say that police were called regarding an assault of a 72-year-old male Hispanic who was discovered "unconscious and unresponsive" in his bed. Police say the victim was discovered with a wire coat hanger around his neck. EMS declared the man dead at the scene.

Police would later identify the deceased as Miguel Sanchez. Officials said an autopsy by the medical examiner would determine Sanchez's cause of death.

Calls to the administrator of the 200-bed facility near East Gun Hill Road were not returned by press time. An employee answering the phone at the Bainbridge Nursing and Rehabilitation Center, said, "They're still investigating. No one knows what happened."

Rise in iPhone Thefts Sparks Legislation

By MICHAEL BROWN JR.

With the introduction of new legislation, two Bronx lawmakers, State Senate Co-Leader Jeff Klein and Assemblyman Jeff Dinowitz, are hoping to significantly curb smartphone thefts. New York City has seen a 10 percent increase in Apple product thefts (including iPhones) and a 25 percent increase in smartphone thefts since last year, according to the legislators.

Klein and Dinowitz met in Riverdale at the site of the 2012 murder of Hwang Yang, 26, who was reportedly killed because he refused to give up his iPhone to Alejandro Campos, 21, and Dominick Davis, 20, who were charged with Yang's murder.

The legislation seeks to hold those who buy the smartphones from thieves and resell them more culpable than they have been in the past. It will require anyone selling an iPhone to provide proof that they are its rightful owner. Anyone who fails to do so can face up to $750 in fines and up to a year in jail.

Part of the legislation also requires that retailers provide receipts for every phone they've sold; the receipts must include the phone's serial number.

"The goal of this legislation is to scare black market retailers out of this terrible business," said Klein. "If you're a retailer making a few extra bucks by selling stolen phones, you're now going to think twice before you open your wallet and pay one of these criminals."

That legislation is not the only effort to combat smartphone thefts across the city.

The NYPD launched Operation I.D., which lets people register their portable devices with the NYPD so that if any devices are lost or stolen, they can be tracked.

In addition to the NYPD's efforts, the new iPhone operating system requires an Apple I.D. and password before turning off the "Find My iPhone" service and will also need an Apple I.D. and password for using the device after it's been "wiped" of personal information. This feature has been called a "Kill Switch."

Smartphone (especially iPhone) thefts have begun to be considered a serious problem in the city with some 20,338 iPhones stolen in 2013 so far.

Billy Cannon, a former police sergeant and current professor of criminal justice at Monroe College, said the commonness of smartphones coupled with inadequate defense against theft is a problem. "Well, everyone has a phone these days and people don't know how to protect them," he said. He believes the NYPD's mostly on top of the problem.

"I think they're doing a good job of educating the public, but they can always do more," Cannon said.

The legislation is expected to be pursued during the next legislative session in Albany, which starts in January.

Cabrera Holding Out on Armory Deal

the next 99 years to Community Action Unlimited, an organization he controls.

The alleged attempt to steer money Cabrera’s way was unsuccessful. Cabrera did, however, get changes made to the composition of the advisory board that will oversee the CBA if the deal goes through, according to Alice McIntosh, a KARA leader and a facilitator of the negotiations.

KNIC and KARA had gone through 30 hours of negotiations with Faulkner in the room and had finally come to an agreement and sent the paperwork to their respective lawyers when Cabrera raised concerns about the make-up of the Community Advisory Council, according to McIntosh. “At that time, Cabrera wanted to make some changes to the agreement,” she said.

Originally, there were to be five members on the CAC, which will, among other things, make recommendations about what type of services and/or activities will be provided in the 50,000 square feet of community space.

But McIntosh said Cabrera insisted on more members and a majority voting system. “We changed it based on his recommendations,” she said.

The final agreement allowed for Cabrera’s office, Community Board 7 and KARA to each have three representatives. CB 7 chooses a community representative and the CB 7 chair chooses which board members will serve.

Cabrera praised the agreement and the ice center at a press conference in April.

“Let me tell you what I’m really excited about,” he gushed while flanked by elected officials included Mayor Michael Bloomberg. “I’m excited about the young people that are gonna be able to come here, especially those people of color.”

He was quoted in the press release as saying “I’m glad to see that the project has a comprehensive community benefits agreement that is going to bring changes to District 14, the Bronx and beyond.”

The Norwood News obtained a 12-page letter dated July 8 and sent on City Council letterhead from Cabrera to Kevin Parker, who leads the group behind the Kingsbridge National Ice Center, requesting a long list of changes to the CBA. Among his complaints was what he called a “toothless” monitoring committee.

Now, as the council vote nears, Cabrera remains the lone local elected official not enthusiastically behind the project.

For Councilman Oliver Koppell, whose district used to cover the Armory and who has been hoping for a sports facility there for more than a decade, it’s a dream come true. He dismissed traffic concerns, saying most spectators would likely use one of the nearby train lines and that the facility holds about 5,000 people, not 55,000 like Yankee Stadium.

“In my opinion, this represents the most positive development that I can imagine, to be honest with you, for [Cabrera’s] district ... The whole neighborhood’s going to be upgraded,” he said.

But he hasn’t heard anywhere near the same enthusiasm from Cabrera. “All I hear from Cabrera is that he hasn’t been willing to commit to it,” Koppell said.

A group of sponsors and CBA signatories are holding a meeting on Nov. 21 at St. Nicholas of Tolentine, 2345 University Ave., to officially announce the Community Benefits Agreement.

“...The purpose of the meeting is to bring the community together to do two things,” McIntosh said. “One, to roll out the Community Benefits Agreement to let everyone in the community know the benefits we will be receiving, and two, to galvanize the community and hopefully influence the vote by showing the City Council that the community supports this project.”

A council vote is expected by the end of the year.

Be Healthy

Obesity Fights Bring New Garden

MEMBERS OF the Bronx's B'N Fit program prepare food harvested from a new community garden.

A couple of health programs designed to battle obesity in the Bronx combined with a Norwood-area church to produce the borough's newest community garden.

The programs — B'N Fit, a weight loss program for obese teens, and CATCH (Bronx Collective Action to Transform Community Health) — joined up with members of St. Ann's Church and associates at Montefiore Medical Center, to build a community garden at 3444 Kossuth Ave.

"The garden is used to encourage urban farming and teach healthy food choices to local kids with the goal of reducing obesity, diabetes, and other health risks," according to a recent press release to announce the garden's first harvest.

When the produce had been harvested, members of CATCH donated the vegetables to teens in the B'N Fit program, who then used them for healthy cooking demonstrations. They also went on to learn about healthy recipes using the hand-picked produce from the garden.
