Leaner and Cleaner, Westchester Square Hospital Gets a New Life

By ANDREA CETRA

Now cracked and crumbling, the limestone slab above the old entrance to the Westchester Square Medical Center still reads “Westchester Square.” But now, a new Montefiore sign juts out onto the sidewalk.

Aside from two delivery trucks, there are few other signs of life. Inside the air conditioned lobby, a snack station advertizes Starbucks coffee. A man with a bandaged head leans on the counter in the waiting room as a TV glares in the background.

In March 2013, Montefiore Medical Center acquired the assets of the former Westchester Square Medical Center (WSMC) which has been bankrupt since 2006, in a $15.5 million bid.

A $20 million grant provided by New York State’s Health Efficiency and Affordability Law financed the purchase. Also known as the HEAL NY Program, the law was passed in 2004 and has provided nearly $3 billion in funding over the past seven years to health care facilities throughout the city.

There are a lot of services that the Square could not offer before, that Montefiore now can,” said Teresa Mandarino, senior director of ambulatory services and a WSMC employee of 34 years.

The new Westchester Square specializes in out-patient emergency care, offering longer hours and more services than does an urgent care center. The facility houses an emergency room, ambulatory surgery division, radiology lab, and gastrointestinal unit.

Renovations include an updated lobby, operating rooms, labs, digital radiology rooms, and outdoor lighting. The upcoming installation of a Pyxis system will facilitate medication management and distribution. Landscaping was set to line the front of the building, but the sidewalk remains shade less.

Leaver, For Now

But as of today, only three of the building’s seven floors including the ground floor are in use. The seventh floor is for ambulatory surgery and the fourth for gastrointestinal procedures, (continued on page 5)

Bronx Girl Comes Home To Head 5-2

By RACHEL FORSHEE

The mood was bittersweet last week as Inspector Joseph Dowling tearfully removed his 52nd Precinct Commanding Officer’s pin and handed it off to Nilda Hofmann, a hometown girl who grew up in the community she will now oversee.

Although there will be a transition period, Hofmann, commander of the 25th Precinct in Harlem for the past three years, takes over a bustling precinct that covers the neighborhoods of Bedford Park, Fordham, Kingsbridge, Norwood and University Heights.

After a little more than two and a half years at the helm of the 52nd Precinct, Dowling is moving on to a position with the Bronx Borough Patrol.

Dems Hype ‘Obamacare’ Benefits

By ALEX KRATZ

As House Republicans attempted to demonize the Affordable Care Act in Washington, DC, local Democratic lawmakers in the Bronx began promoting the healthcare reform package, often referred to as “Obamacare,” as a significant improvement in how Americans pay for and receive health care.

Because the House, which is controlled by Republicans, continued to link every budget bill to the de-funding of the Affordable Care Act, the federal government was forced to shut down many of its operations on Tuesday. (Editor’s note: See page 2 for more details on what the shutdown means. As of press time Tuesday night, Republicans and Democrats were not close to a compromise.)

President Obama, however, said he will not sign anything into law that would diminish his signature piece of legislation. Its funding is not tied to the general operating budget, meaning people were able to start shopping for new insurance plans through the act’s mandated online marketplaces on Tuesday morning.

In the lead up to the launch of the marketplaces, Democrats were out hyping up its benefits and disparaging Republican political tactics.

By the slimmest of margins, Victor Pichardo emerged with a victory in the heated and congested special election for the 86th Assembly District, which includes University Heights and Morris Heights. Though the Board of Elections finally declared him the winner by 72 votes last week, Pichardo did not emerge unscathed and a lawsuit looms.

Second place finisher Hector Ramirez says he will file a civil suit against Pichardo, the Board of Elections, State Senator Gustavo Rivera and Assemblyman Carl Heastie, saying they are all part of a corrupt political machine that conspired to rig the election in Pichardo’s favor. Ramirez, of course, was backed by Heastie and the Bronx Democratic machine back in 2006 when he lost the primary to Nelson Castro.

Castro then went on to take office, get indicted on perjury charges, become a government informant and help build a case against fellow Bronx assembly member Eric Stevenson. He resigned from office earlier this year and is now the star witness in the case against Stevenson.

Ramirez says he has “no doubt” he won the election and is not going down without a fight. Although his case will be difficult to prove, there was evidence of irregularities during voting in the district.

SNAP Bill on the Clock

Two weeks ago, House Republicans voted to enact a harsh SNAP bill that, according to USA Today, will result in 3 million people losing their benefits entirely and 850,000 people experiencing a reduction in benefits. Then on Tuesday, we were all witness to the first government shutdown since 1995-96, because Congress could not agree on a budget.

There are roughly 48 million people, 1.8 million in New York, who rely on SNAP (previously known as food stamps), which is scheduled to be reduced — regardless of the government shutdown — on Nov. 1. Republicans are proposing an additional $39 billion to be cut from the program over the next 10 years.

Republicans say they don’t want the program eliminated, they simply want loopholes removed so the benefits go to qualifying families. Democrats and hunger advocates say the cuts will hurt working parents, children, seniors and those with disabilities who need help in trying times.

To bring attention to the potential cuts, the New York City Hunger Coalition set up a countdown clock on the side of Cathedral Church of Saint John the Divine in Manhattan.

Congress and the President must work together to stop the clock and restore this life-saving food,” said New York City Coalition Against Hunger Executive Director Joel Berg. “Any further reduction in these already meager benefits would result in a drastic and unimaginable rise in the number of hungry Americans. As shocking as it is that things could get even worse, the government shutdown could start shutting WIC clinics nationwide that provide nutrition assistance to low-income pregnant women and infants.”

Berg, along with several other Demo-

VICTOR PICHARDO was declared the winner in the special election for the 86th Assembly District, but not without controversy. An estimated 890,000 federal workers were expected to be told to stay home until further notice. Many services, however, will actually remain open. The Bronx VA in Kingsbridge will continue to care for patients. The United States Post Office will still deliver mail. People will still receive their Social Security checks.

But many agencies will cut back to skeleton crews and several will shut down completely.

What this means is that the head of an agency will divide their workers into “essential” and “non-essential” categories. “Essential” workers will remain at their job possibly with delayed pay; while all “non-essential” workers will be sent home. The government estimates that to be around 800,000 workers.

The Washington Post reported that anything related to national security, public safety or programs written into permanent law will still remain operating. The U.S. Military will still be operating and so will Air Traffic Controllers, Emergency Medical Care, Border Patrol, Federal Prisons, and Law Enforcement.

Lehman College
Awarded Highest Green Building Certification

By MICHAEL BROWN

Lehman College’s new Science Hall recently became the first City University of New York school to be awarded a LEED platinum certification by the U.S. Green Building Council.

The U.S. Green Building Council is a non-profit organization dedicated to promoting “green” buildings, and is well known for its creation of the LEED (Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design) rating system. The LEED rating system judges buildings on how environmentally-friendly they are. Platinum certification is the highest possible rating with gold, silver, and certified being the other levels from top to bottom.

Lehman’s Science Hall was built with $70 million in state funding through the CUNY Capital Program. Another $1.5 million was provided by the New York City Council for the greenhouse. The building was dedicated in October of 2012 and classes started in the spring semester of 2013.

The Science Hall is phase one of a three-phase plan with the goal of creating a science-oriented campus of the college. It was built also as part of the Bedford Park school’s STEM (science, technology, engineering, and math) initiative. As Dr. Ayanna Alexander-Street, of the Department of Biological Sciences, says, “We want to put science students from the Bronx on the nation’s map.”

The Science Hall won the platinum certification due to its “environmentally sustainable technologies” such as rooftop solar panels, which are used to heat the building’s water, and a garden system that collects rainwater, filters it, and reuses it.

There is also a greenhouse in the building. The newest of the three greenhouses at Lehman, it was built especially for the Science Hall using state-of-the-art lighting that can mimic other light types, a cooling system and heating system that reacts to the temperature in the room and adjusts accordingly. “I love to come up in February when it’s 60 outside and 80 in here,” said Dr. Liesl Jones, chairperson of Biological Sciences.

The Science Hall winning a LEED platinum certification is a bold step on the path of environmentally-friendly buildings in the Bronx, New York, and the world, says Rick Fedrizzi, president, CEO and founding chair of the U.S. Green Building Council:

“With each new LEED-certified building, we get one step closer to our vision of a sustainably built environment within a generation,” said Fedrizzi. “As the newest member of the LEED family of green buildings, Lehman College is an important addition to the growing strength of the green building movement.”

This week we asked readers what they knew and thought about the Affordable Care Act, also known as Obamacare.

I think it’s a very important issue, everyone needs healthcare.
Tina Joyce

I haven’t had the time to read the entire bill, but it’s a very complicated issue. I’m in favor of healthcare for all.
Mamadou Doumbouya

Basically what I know about Obamacare is that Medicaid is a part of it and it’s mandatory that everybody receive Medicare [actually, healthcare insurance] and there is a penalty for those that don’t obtain it [true] and I think that that’s weird.
Dwanyel Okaman

I don’t really know much about Obamacare, but I think if they explained it a little better to the American people, I would know if it will work, but right now I don’t know very much about it.
Emerald Gray

All Americans should have healthcare. I mean we do live in America, right? We do get sick. If we don’t have insurance we’d get fined? Really? I think that’s out of line.

Westchester Square Hospital Gets a New Life

Emergency Department Department Director Rafael Torres said.

“There are plans to populate the other floors with different programs,” Mandarino said. “It will be at least another year or so,” she added, indicating that the ambulatory surgery department will soon be moved to occupy the same level as the general operating room. In its first three months, the new Center, which was recently ranked #7 among the top 10 best ranking hospitals in New York and the New York metropolitan area by the U.S. News & World Report, has treated roughly 4,500 Emergency Department patients and is open 24/7 (as was the former facility). Meanwhile, the Ambulatory Surgery Center has performed 1,400 outpatient procedures, according to a recent press release.

But since the facility only functions as an Emergency Department, 250 patients who require overnight stays have already been transferred to nearby Montefiore branches since March, although Torres said the practice is common. Here’s how the process works: once it is determined a patient needs to be treated in a more appropriate setting, he said, “it will be at least another year or so,” she added, indicating that the ambulance is called as staff members make contact with physicians at the new facility.

Some Still Skeptical

Yet critics, including former members of WSMC’s board, most of whom were physicians working at WSMC were given jobs at Westchester Square Medical Center to remain open and viable, full-service hospitals, and the loss of jobs.

The people who live in Westchester Square deserve care in their community,” said Judy Sheridan-Gonzalez, RN and vice president of the New York State Nurses Association. “We are closely monitoring how the reduction of services at Westchester Square is affecting nurses and patients at other Bronx hospitals, and we are working with hospital administrators to make sure there are enough nurses to meet the increased patient need,” she said.

“We can handle anything that crosses through the door,” Torres said when asked about the loss of beds.

As for the loss of jobs? Montefiore says it has nearly everyone covered, although the details remain murky.

Of the roughly 600 to 800 employees under the old guard, nearly 300 were given part- or full-time jobs at Westchester Square. Montefiore reports that a “huge number” of former WSMC employees are working at other Bronx hospitals, and over 100 staffers were reassigned to other branches, Montefiore said.

According to the hospital, a “huge majority” of former WSMC employees maintained their positions. A representative from 1199 SEIU United Healthcare Workers East reported that as of April 2013, at least 196 of the 320 union members working at WSMC were given jobs at the new facility or at other Montefiore branches.

“We’re pleased that Montefiore has decided to acquire Westchester Square Medical Center’s campus, and that as a result, quality healthcare and good jobs in the community will be saved,” said Joyce Neil, executive vice president of 1199SEIU.

Montefiore said Westchester Square has been busy since opening its doors to the public, and treats an average of 49 patients per day. This is typical for Emergency Departments nationwide, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) which reported that in 2012 there was an average of 43 visits per day.

Change is Good

Current employees say they are pleased with the changes.

“It’s more organized, and the flow is much better;” said Andrea Mackiewicz, an administrative nursing manager and former WSMC employee of 20 years.

“We are so pleased the community has embraced Montefiore Westchester Square,” said Steven M. Safyer, president and CEO of Montefiore, in a recent press release. “Our goal from the very start was to preserve access to the best of health care services by providing exceptional care to meet the community’s needs as well as to preserve jobs and support the local economy,” he said.

“There has been nothing but positive changes here, from the updating of the exterior, to the inside of the building where all the renovations have taken place,” Mandarino said. “Basically Montefiore has breathed new life into this facility.”

According to Mandarino, services at the old center were dwindling long before it officially went bankrupt. “It was very rough during the last six to eight months of operation [before Montefiore],” she said, adding that at one point there were only 80 beds in use. “Some of the patients were told that the hospital was closing and not to come here, so that was just another uphill battle that we were facing,” Mandarino said.

But WSMC has a long history of fighting for its life. In 2007, the Center was added to Governor Pataki’s Berger Commission list of five city hospitals set for closure. But in December 2008, just two days before it was scheduled to shut down, the facility was given a one-year extension during which to find a buyer. State Senator Jeffrey Klein, Assemblyman Michael Benedetto, and Congressman Joseph Crowley were among those who lobbied heavily in the Center’s defense.

“While I would have liked for Westchester Square Medical Center to remain open and viable, full-service hospital in the Bronx,” Klein said, “I am pleased that Montefiore is able to continue offering emergency care to members of the community and hope that it will continue to provide critical services to the Bronx for years to come.

According to the Bronx Times, the new Westchester Square will not have a community advisory board but will continue to host “community forums” where residents can share input, the first of which is scheduled to take place this fall.

Dems Hype ‘Obamacare’ Benefits

ponent of the Affordable Care Act when the president and Democrats pushed it through Congress in 2010, told a crowd at North Central Bronx Hospital that the reform package “is complicated,” but will begin showing tangible benefits. Comparing it to other established programs, like Social Security and Medicare, Rangel said Americans will soon adopt the ACA’s “language and make it your own.”

Rangel told the audience the healthcare reforms made under ACA will be the “best thing” Obama does during his presidency. For this reason, he says, Republicans want to tear it down. “They will do anything to hurt this president,” Rangel said.

While some of the act’s benefits have already started — children can now stay on their parents’ insurance until the age of 26, for example — the big test of its impact comes this fall.

In every state including New York, healthcare marketplaces or “exchanges” where individuals, families and small businesses can choose between insurance options, opened up online.

The 70 percent of Americans who already have insurance can stay with what they have or use the exchange to find a cheaper or better alternative. The other roughly 30 percent without insurance, which amounts to about 40 million people, must sign up for some type of insurance or face a tax “penalty.” Some people with low income levels may receive federal or face a tax “penalty.” Some people with younger brother and won’t give it back, just because.

Proponents of the plan admit the system isn’t perfect — delays and glitches were reported during the grand opening on Tuesday — but they say it will have a positive impact.

Kate Rose, the senior director of public policy and government relations at Montefiore Medical Center, said the insurance options in New York will be as good as any in the country. “New York’s marketplace is exceptional,” she said. “It goes above and beyond the minimum in comparison with other states and the federal government.”

Rose says New York’s program is going out of its way to be as helpful as possible. On Tuesday, the state’s online marketplace, New York State of Health, received more than two million visitors.

Rangel said the idea behind near universal health insurance is simple — it will allow for more preventative care, which will allow more people to stay healthy, productive and successful.

On Tuesday, outside Montefiore’s main entrance on East 210th Street in Norwood, the hospital set up booths as part of a campaign to inform staff and local residents about the new healthcare insurance exchange. Judy Czydek was there because her husband just received a bone marrow transplant. She’s covered under Medicare, but said she also wanted to get information for her nephew who recently lost his job and, with it, his insurance. She’s a believer in Obamacare because of its potentially preventative benefits.

“A lot of times if you can go to the doctor and they can detect something in its infancy, they can address this and can get you back on your feet with a better chance of recovery,” she said. “So I think that’s the right thing to do and I’m just appalled at anyone who’s against something like this.”

Republicans have pledged to end Obamcare, which they refer to as a “job-killing” program that is a grave threat to the American way of life. But defenders of the program say it’s just sour grapes.

Dowling replaced former commander John D’Adamo who abruptly left after a series of scandals, including an incident involving his wife lying to authorities and his name coming up in the Bronx ticket-fixing scandal. D’Adamo was never charged with any wrongdoing, but left after less than 17 months on the job. Typically, commanding officers serve between two to four years at a precinct. They are rotated frequently to avoid corruption and stagnation.

Dowling leaves after earning a reputation as a thoughtful, responsive commander who saw violent crime drop significantly in the precinct last year, only to see those numbers rebound this year. “The feeling that we’re all feeling tonight are the same ones I had last night as I left the Two-Five,” said Hofmann during an emotional introduction to her new precinct. “You become part of a community. So even if I feel sad about leaving, this is a homecoming for me.”

In fact, Hofmann can count the “Five-Two” as her home stomping ground. “I went to Walton High School [in Kingsbridge Heights],” she said. “My first job was as a cashier at the Associated [on East Burnside Avenue]. I used to hang out with my boyfriend right in this park right over here [St. James Park].”

Both Dowling and Hofmann addressed a nearly full room for the monthly meeting of the 52nd Precinct Community Council meeting held at St. James Episcopal Church on Jerome Avenue last Thursday, Sept. 26.

“We’ve come a long way,” said Community Council President Brenda Caldwell-Paris. “I remember the 70s when they would threaten to close down the Five-Two. But after years of work, we have built the most vibrant Precinct Community Council meeting held at St. James Episcopal Church on Jerome Avenue last Thursday, Sept. 26.

Man Charged in Three Attacks on Women

Police have announced the arrest of a suspect wanted in connection with three attacks on women, including one attack where he removed the victim’s shoes and smelled her feet.

Cops say University Avenue resident Calvin Presinal, 28, approached his victims from behind and choked them until they passed out. Presinal reportedly approached his first victim at 12:10 a.m. on Aug. 5, when a 21-year-old woman was attacked at West Kingsbridge Road and Jerome Avenue.

Investigators have also charged Presinal with two additional attacks that took place on Aug. 30. Police say the second victim was approached at the intersection of Sedgwick and Bailey avenues at 1:10 a.m. in that incident, Presinal reportedly removed the shoes of his 18-year-old victim and sniffed her feet before running off.

Less than a half hour later, police say Presinal struck again along Parkview Terrace in Bedford Park, when he allegedly approached a 24-year-old woman, then choked her and wrestled her to the ground. The victim reportedly fought back as the suspect attempted to undress her.

Presinal was arrested on Friday, Sept. 6, and charged with three counts of assault, three counts of strangulation and attempted rape.

Police continue to hunt for a second individual who is being sought in connection with the Aug. 21 attempted sexual assault of a 20-year-old Fordham University student, who was attacked inside her off-campus building. —DAVID GREENE

Grassroots Opposition to NCBH Decision Growing

Local residents are teaming with unions and healthcare advocates in putting pressure on North Central Bronx Hospital to re-open its popular labor and delivery department.

A couple of weeks ago, organizing under the name Community Power: North Bronx, more than a dozen residents from the area around North Central Bronx Hospital held a protest march outside the hospital’s entrance on Kossuth Avenue.

They were joined by members of DC 37, the New York State Nurses Association, Lawyers for the Public Interest, Northwest Bronx Community and Clergy Coalition and the Commission on the Public’s Health System.

Their singular goal: push hospital officials to re-open the labor and delivery units at NCB. Officials have only said that the services have been suspended, which opponents of the changes say is an opening for a reversal.

The fledgling local group began organizing in Williamsbridge Oval Park around the closure of NCB’s labor and delivery unit and is intent on becoming an activist voice in the community, said member Eileen Markey.

At least one midwife, who was transferred from North Central to Jacobi Hospital along with the rest of her department, was on hand to participate. She said morale has been low since NCB made the abrupt decision to consolidate its labor and delivery services at Jacobi. While declining to give her name because she feared retribution, the midwife said the group’s coalescing in opposition to the consolidation of services at Jacobi might work, because now it’s “not just disgruntled workers. They don’t care about us.”

NCB officials have said the consolidation was necessary to cut costs. A spokesperson for the hospital declined to answer specific questions.

An opposition vigil, led by Community Power: North Bronx was scheduled for Wednesday night, Oct. 2.

Thousands gathered under the 4 train tracks on Jerome Avenue in Norwood for the 12th annual Jerome-Gun Hill Business Improvement Street Festival. The festival was highlighted by a tribute concert for the late local artist and musician Ibrahim Gonzalez who died earlier this year. The concert band, which featured many of Gonzalez’s friends and colleagues, was directed by legendary Latin Jazz percussionist Bobby Sanabria. The festival also featured performances by several other musical acts, some 200 vendors, kids’ activities, health information provided by Montefiore Medical Center, and more. See more photos from the festival at norwoodnews.org.

Bronx neighborhood parks wait as Parks Department deadlines come and go. Weeds overgrow an old slide set. Plastic bags are wadded up in cracks that would spell danger, or at least a sprained ankle, for residents who would use Mount Hope Garden — just one of the Bronx parks in need of improvements — if, of course, it was open.

Between 2010 and 2013, the Department of Parks and Recreation received $5.33 million in capital funding for the parks of District 14, which includes the neighborhoods of Kingsbridge, Morris Heights and University Heights. To date, none of the funds have been used for this purpose.

Mount Hope Garden, on Creston Avenue, was set to receive $1 million for repairs and surveillance cameras — repairs so severely needed, the park was forced to shutter its gates in 2009. The funds are there, but construction has yet to begin.

According to District 14 Council Member Fernando Cabrera, the story of Mount Hope and other parks in the Bronx is all too familiar.

“Mount Hope Garden is a prime example of what is going on with the parks,” said Cabrera, in an interview. “Five years ago the Parks Department closed it down, rebuilt it, and five months later they shut it down again because they didn’t do their job right.” He added: “As a result, what we have is one of the worst parks in the city. If this were in Manhattan, I guarantee you that it wouldn’t be in that condition for five years. Here in the Bronx we do better and we expect better.”

Residents in Norwood, part of the 11th Council District, recently demanded the re-opening of the Williamsbridge Oval Park Recreation Center, which has been closed for four years, and was supposed to re-open before the summer of 2011. It’s now slated to open sometime this fall.

In District 14, Grand Avenue Playground, St. James Park, Devaney Triangle and Regatta Park have all been allocated funds but have seen no movement forward, Cabrera said.

According to New York City Parks Advocates President and Founder Geoffrey Croft, similar situations can be found all over the city: “I have heard complaints for many years that the Parks Department’s Capital Division is not doing their job,” Croft said. Calling the Parks Department incompetent is just the tip of the iceberg, according to Croft.

A report released in January from the city comptroller appears to confirm Croft’s beliefs. More than 47 percent of parks projects are listed as “behind schedule,” with cost overruns cited in every borough.

“Unfortunately, this administration is more interested in ground breakings than actually seeing these projects through completion,” said Croft. Croft blamed much of the overruns on “soft costs,” or management and administration. He said that in some cases, these soft costs accounted for more than 30 percent of the total projects. “And the longer these projects are delayed, the more they end up costing,” he said.

In an email statement, a Parks Department spokesperson said the department has completed many other projects in a timely manner and on budget, noting that cost overruns affected only 10 percent of the total projects in 2012. However, in terms of scheduling, they do concede there is more to be done.

“We recognize that there is more we can do to ensure that our projects are completed on time and have taken steps to improve our processes so that more projects finish within their estimated completion dates,” spokesperson Zachary Feder said in an email.

Feder also pointed out the extensive work that has been done at Williamsbridge Oval Park, including $14 million in renovations that have been made since 2008. The latest delays at the rec center, the department says, are due to additional improvement not originally planned for.

But for both Cabrera and Assemblyman Jeffrey Dinowitz, communication with the department has not been so straightforward. Both politicians have said they have often been left waiting when it came to getting answers from the agency.

Dinowitz’s office first contacted the Parks Department in April and received notification that work on the Oval Park Rec Center would be completed over the summer: “Now I insist that the Parks Department provide my office with the details of the remaining work being completed on this project,” Dinowitz said.

In Cabrera’s case, he first received communication from the Parks Department, including a “snapshot” of standing projects, last June, along with a schedule of which deadline has been missed. “The mayor allocated money for University Park and they put in the request way after us and that project is already done!” said Cabrera. “Sometimes I feel like the mayor has it out for us.”

The Parks Department declined to say when construction on Mount Hope Garden will be completed.
