When she was nine years old, Shira Blumenthal, founder of the nationwide anti-bullying movement, #HatNotHate, was a self-described, chubby girl with short frizzy hair, buck teeth, and very little confidence. At the start of fourth grade, she had two friends. “They were a little cooler than I was, but that didn’t faze me,” she writes on her website, hatnothate.org. Then, there was another “cool” girl in her class, who, she wrote, was friends with everyone, boys and girls, and who always wore a bra strap headband, which she told other kids her mother had invented. Blumenthal said she can’t remember the first time she was bullied by the girl, but she continually made...
Couple Hand out Gift Cards on Valentine’s Day

by DAVID GREENE

A couple celebrating St. Valentine’s Day, who wanted to give back to elderly residents of Fordham Manor, spent some of the day attempting to hand out eight $25 gift cards at their local supermarket to surprised and grateful shoppers.

Early on Sunday morning, Feb. 14, Joseph Riley and his wife of ten years, Monique Ferguson-Riley, showed up at the Food Universe on East 194th Street, between Marion Avenue and Bainbridge Avenue, and handed out the $25 Visa gift cards to customers walking down the aisles, or at the checkout line.

Ferguson-Riley was born in Miami and raised in New York, while Riley was born in Houston. The couple met back in 2008 in Saint Paul, Minnesota where they both worked at a Borders bookstore. The chain closed in 2011, and the couple now live in The Bronx. According to Ferguson-Riley, today, the couple are “proud business owners, parents and (are) thriving” in their marriage.

The two run the Freedom Youth Family Justice Center, Inc., a nonprofit based on Broadway in Manhattan, whose ongoing work with combating human trafficking and domestic violence has previously been reported on by the Norwood News.

As he scouted for potential shoppers to whom he could hand out some of the gift cards, Riley was overheard by the Norwood News, which filmed the occasion, telling Food Universe manager, Jose Mimya, “I come here all the time, so I figured we’d do a little something in the area.”

Mimya was asked if anyone had ever handed out gift cards at Food Universe in the ten-plus years it’s been in business. Referring to a woman at the checkout counter to whom Ferguson-Riley had just handed a gift card, he replied, “Here? No, but that woman was really happy.”

Explaining the reason behind the giveaway, the nonprofit founder said, “Basically, I have an older neighbor downstairs, and she’s often times in need of help or just wanting a conversation with people, so I was thinking of her and other people like her that are often left out, and don’t have anybody during Valentine’s day or on special days.”

Ferguson-Riley continued, “So, I just wanted to come out here and help some older people that are in need and helping towards their food. Some people reacted real funny, but I’m assuming they didn’t want to be on camera. Other people really appreciated getting the gift card.”

Meanwhile, when asked if this was their first time giving to strangers, Riley replied, “No, it’s not our first time...one of the things we do is combat human trafficking and domestic violence, but we love to give back. Our motto is always, if we get something, we try our best to give what we have back, so that’s what it’s about.”

As hard as it is to make a dollar, it’s apparently just as hard to give away cash. At one point, Riley was seen approaching one female shopper near the fruit counter. He politely waited for another person to pass between them, and then began to get a bit closer to the woman than the recommended, 6-foot, social distancing threshold. Despite the fact that he was wearing the required face covering, the woman seemed to be a bit suspicious of Riley’s motives.

As he attempted his pitch, telling the woman, “I work with a nonprofit...” the woman shook her head, and said, “No.” He tried to continue, “No, listen. You don’t want this? It’s $25 off your purchase.” The woman again shook her head and repeated, “No.”

Riley did not push the matter, and walked away with a regretful smile, saying, “It’s weird, it’s a $25 gift card... trying to spread a little cheer, a little spirit of love in the season of love, but we’ll continue to find somebody,” and he walked back down the aisle.

Meanwhile, Ferguson-Riley said that she shops at the store because Food Universe didn’t raise their prices dramatically when the pandemic hit, unlike other stores in the area. “It’s a good store and I like to shop here,” she added.

After a few more refusals of his goodwill donation, Riley said he believed some shoppers may have been undocumented, and as such, may have been wary of being recorded on video. In total, the couple gave out gift cards to seven shoppers, mostly seniors, and one retired member of the Army National Guard.

Asked how long the couple have been doing this, Joseph replied, “From day one... whatever we get... if we get food, we figure we give it right back, and we do this all the time.”

Moments after receiving her gift card, Iris Fevus, a Briggs Avenue resident, said “I was on line, and all of a sudden they presented me with this card, and I didn’t expect it, no Sir. That was a good Valentine’s. Of course, every little bit helps the way things are now with this COVID, and economic problems we’re going through.”

Bedford Park Mosque Organizes Coat Drive

By JOSÉ A. GIRALT

On a cold but bright and sunny afternoon, members of “Masjídu Sabur” set up a table on Bainbridge Avenue in Bedford Park for their annual winter coat and essentials drive. Masjídu is the Islamic term for mosque. Imam Alprentice Talibuđeen McCutchen helped manage the event on Feb. 5 in front of the mosque, located at 2975 Bainbridge Avenue. “In today’s event, we’re giving away free coats for children as well as teenagers and adults... and book bags,” he said.

A group of four to five volunteers joined McCutchen in manning a folding table surrounded by multiple boxes of coats in a variety of colors, still neatly folded and wrapped in protective plastic. They took turns approaching people who were walking along both sidewalks, directing them towards the table. Many of the adults who stopped by were accompanying school-aged children.

Although none of the visitors agreed to be interviewed on the record, several expressed gratitude for the free coats and book bags. One adult said in Spanish, “Eso está bien,” [This is good]. Coat drives like these are not new for the members of the mosque. Originally formed in 1995 in Harlem, Masjídu Sabur moved into their current location in Bedford Park five years ago. “We’ve been doing coat drives since our inception [in Harlem] for the past 20 years,” McCutchen said.

On the day of the event, they were stocked with 75 coats and “about 30 book bags,” according to McCutchen. The coat drive was completely funded by contributions from the mosque’s members, which number around 75. Iman Umar Abdul-Jalil is the senior iman at Masjídu Sabur, and is retired from his secular job as a commissioner with the City’s Department of Corrections.

He is especially proud of the ties that members maintain with the mosque even after they move away. “We have members that stretch out throughout the five boroughs. We have members that live in Maryland, members that live in Georgia,” Abdul-Jalil told the Norwood News.

“We have people that relocate, people in North Carolina, but they still send their monthly donations as part of their membership here,” he clarifies, however, that those members who attend the mosque on Bainbridge Avenue in person, span from Mt. Vernon to Staten Island.

As reported previously by the Norwood News, a 2018 report by the group, Muslims for American Progress, a project of the Institute for Social Policy and Understanding, found that Muslims make up 9.6 percent of the City’s population. Some, though not all, of Norwood’s Bengali community, for example, are Muslim.

The report found that this extremely diverse populace includes descendants of Muslims who have lived in the United States’ geographical area since before its founding, arriving in America as early explorers and enslaved Africans, as well as recent immigrants from 75+ nations.

The report also found that a large number of the City’s Muslims work in front line services. For example, Muslims make up 9.7 percent of those who work at food stands, and 8.1 percent of those who work in the taxi industry, two sectors still badly hit by the flailing economy.

On the other hand, Muslims make up 57.5 percent of people who work in the medical profession, while 8.1 percent of those who work in respiratory therapy, specifically, are Muslim.

In terms of charitable work, in 2016, the report found that Muslim New Yorkers donated over $608 million to charity, 33 percent more than the average American household. Charitable donations also often stay close to home. For example, after Hurricane Sandy devastated parts of Staten Island in 2012, 900 individuals from Muslim organizations volunteered to deliver food, conducted needs assessment, and helped with clean-up efforts.

Abdul-Jalil said that the mosque’s members are committed to being good neighbors in Bedford Park and beyond. Although they are a faith-based group, he said that they believe that reaching out beyond the Islamic community is an important aspect of their religion.

Acknowledging that Muslims are not immune to the negative effects of the pandemic, economic and otherwise, he said he feels that members want to do more for others. “We are not promoting religiosity,” Abdul-Jamil said. “We are promoting neighborly needs. We are part of the neighborhood.”

When asked what would happen to any coats and book bags left over from the event, McCutchen said he sees an opportunity for another giveaway event. “We’ll take stock, so we can do it another day,” he said. “We try to support the community as much as possible.”

This week, we asked readers how they planned to celebrate St. Valentine’s Day amid the COVID-19 pandemic.

“Do have plans with a special guy this year for Valentine’s Day. We talked about the possibility of going out to a restaurant for this day, and we both decided it’s best to just stay at his place, and he’s going to cook for me. It is because we are choosing not to be around too many people, and who knows if restaurants are going to get crowded on Valentine’s Day, due to venues opening, I believe it will be easier year. With the vaccine, and more meeting opportunities, I am hopeful for next Valentine’s Day, but I am hopeful for next year. With the vaccine, and more meeting venues opening, I believe it will be easier to meet someone.”

“I got divorced two years ago and once I was ready to get back into the dating scene, the coronavirus hit. With the difficulties of social distancing and being safe, I had to think outside the box for meeting potential dates. A few friends of mine suggested I join a dating group on Facebook and here I am. I, unfortunately, didn’t find anyone to join me this Valentine’s Day, but I am hopeful for next year. With the vaccine, and more meeting venues opening, I believe it will be easier to meet someone.”

“My husband and I were planning on dressing up and dining out, but due to COVID, dining out will be extremely packed no matter where we make reservations. So, I went out and purchased a backdrop, bought some aged wine and prepped our three-course meal which consists of toasted garlic bread and homemade sauce for dipping. I will be making a tossed salad to go along with chicken and shrimp, with jasmine rice and broccoli and carrots, or his choice of mashed potatoes and finishing the course with homemade strawberry cheesecake. We want to still feel like we are heading out somewhere we both love, so we will dress up. We also wanted to perform an act of kindness to the ones that are oftentimes overlooked, and may have lost their significant other, so we will be randomly selecting elders in a nearby grocery store and present them with gift cards.”

“My husband and I are spending the day at home, making a romantic meal with both of us sharing the cooking, while sharing a glass of wine. There is nothing better than to be in the comfort of your own home, cooking exactly what we prefer. And since it’s Sunday, it’s a perfect day to relax and enjoy a great dinner with great company. Even though indoor dining has opened, we are playing it safe for a while.”

“It’s good that they’ve, at least, opened the small businesses and restaurants at 25 percent now, but small businesses need more support in the city of New York. My concerns basically are the new housing developments going up in our community, COVID vaccinations and getting more people tested. I don’t celebrate Valentine’s Day, I’m Muslim and we don’t celebrate Valentine’s. Every day is a day of love and happiness for our wives.”

District 15 City Council Race: Several Labor Unions Endorse Ischia Bravo

By SÍLE MOLONEY

District manager for Bronx Community District 7 (CB7) and Democratic candidate in the 15th District City Council race, Ischia Bravo, has secured the support of several major labor unions just weeks before the special election is due to be held on March 23. Bravo is running to fill the seat of former Councilman and now Congressman, Ritchie Torres, who was elected to Congress in November 2020.

Bravo has secured the support of the Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union (RWDSU), the New York State Nurses Association (NYSNA), the Laundry, Distribution and Food Service Joint Board, Workers United, SEIU; District Council 37, AFSCME, and District Council 9 New York UFW, Painters and Allied Trades.

The Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union (RWDSU) represents 100,000 members throughout the United States, and is affiliated with the United Food and Commercial Workers Union (UFCW). The union played a pivotal role in the development and passing of the “Fair Wages for New Yorkers” Act, the nation’s first significant “living wage” bill, in 2012.

RWDSU president, Stuart Appelbaum said Bravo has a long record of service and leadership in her local community. “She’ll be a fighter for the Bronx and the many RWDSU members who live in her district,” he said.

Meanwhile, District Council 37, AFSCME, is New York City’s largest public employee union, with 125,000 members and 50,000 retirees. DC 37 members include over 1,000 job titles – everything from accountants to zookeepers. Henry Garrido is the executive director of the union and said that workers answered the call when New Yorkers needed them most and now elected officials must answer theirs. “Ischia understands that, and is committed to putting working people first,” he said.

The New York State Nurses Association (NYSNA) is a union of 42,000 frontline nurses who advocate for their practice, safe staffing, and healthcare for all. They are New York’s largest union and professional association for registered nurses.

The Laundry, Distribution and Food Service Joint Board, Workers United, SEIU represents members in the private and public sector in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. The union represents more than 8,500 members across the region.

District Council 9 of the International Union of Painters and Allied Trades (IUPAT) is an organization of painters, decorators, wall coverers, drywall finishers, sign painters, metal polishers, bridge and structural steel painters, civil service painters, lead abatement workers, glaziers and architectural metal glassworkers, paint makers, and allied tradesmen. The union represents more than 11,000 members across the region.

Joe Azzopardi is the union’s business manager and secretary treasurer. He described Bravo as a lifelong Bronx native and community advocate who is determined to improve the quality of life for every resident in District 15.

Bravo was previously endorsed by Bronx Borough President Ruben Diaz Jr., in addition to prior endorsements from State Senators Jessica Ramos and Alessandra Biaggi, the latter representing parts of the Bronx and Westchester.

Bravo has also been endorsed by the Northwest Bronx Democrats, United Federation of Teachers, the New York City Central Labor Council, Assembly Member Nathalia Fernández, who represents the 80th Assembly District and who is currently running for Bronx borough president, as well as by Assembly Member Catalina Cruz, City Council Member Diana Ayala, civil rights leaders Tamika Mallory, and several other labor unions including District 15 City Council seat. Councilman Fernando Cabrera issued a statement on Monday, Feb. 15, demanding an end to what he called the “madness” of requiring officers to work triple shifts, saying the practice not only endangered officers but inmates as well. Cabrera said Correction Officers are often forced to sleep in their cars, rather than risk driving home after completing required marathon double or triple shifts. He said this fact alone should be of great concern to all New Yorkers, and the city should immediately hire a sufficient number of officers to end the policy.

The FDNY uses two tower ladders to battle a three-alarm blaze in Woodlawn on Monday, Feb. 15, 2021.

One Firefighter Injured, Residents Displaced in Woodlawn Blaze

by DAVID GREENE

A three-alarm fire in the Woodlawn section of the Bronx has injured one firefighter and destroyed two businesses according to the FDNY. Meanwhile, one of the business owners told the Norwood News that four families living in four separate apartments, above the damaged businesses, have been displaced.

According to the FDNY, the fire was reported at 8.34 a.m. on Monday, February 15, inside the basement of the Katonah Family Deli and Grocery, located at 4293 Katonah Avenue.

A fire department official said the fire extended to the first floor of the apartment building, and that 138 firefighters from 33 units responded to the incident. Members of the Yonkers Fire Department were seen in photos assisting with the blaze.

The fire was brought under control at 11.03 a.m. on the same day, with EMS reporting that one firefighter was injured and transported to Montefiore Medical Center. Paramedics reported treating one civilian at the scene, but the victim was not transported to hospital.

The Norwood News attempted to reach the Katonah Family Deli and Grocery for comment, but their telephone number was no longer working.

A second business, Precise Construction, located at 287 East 236th Street was also heavily damaged. An unidentified female employee who answered the phone at the business on Tuesday, Feb. 16, told the Norwood News, “Oh yeah. Well, our office was damaged, but I can’t really tell you too much because we don’t know much. There was a fire in our office, and everything was ruined.”

Asked if her company would rebuild, the woman responded, “I’m sure we will eventually, when they find out what’s going on with this building. Everything is wet and walls are pulled down and everything.”

The Norwood News asked about the status of the four families living in the three-story building who lived over the businesses. The woman said, “They were all evacuated. Thank God nobody was hurt. That was the main thing.” In response to a question about whether the families were still there or if they had been permanently evacuated, the woman said they were not there, as nobody was allowed back into the building.

The Norwood News reached out to The Red Cross of Greater New York to see if they had any information on the status of the families. A statement received from Mike de Vulpillières read, “Up until now, no one needed / requested our services. We remain available to help if anyone needs it.”

The Norwood News also made inquiries with the Emerald Pharmacy, located next door to the Katonah Family Deli, and we were informed that it suffered no damage as a result of the fire, and was open for business the following day.
At The Woodlawn Cemetery, we are proud to offer families a variety of options for a final resting place – including pre-construction plans for our beautiful, brand new Maple Mausoleum. Man Sought for Robbery Pattern Inquiry

The NYPD is seeking the public’s assistance identifying the man seen in the attached photo (right), who is sought in connection with robberies that occurred in the 52nd and in the 50th precincts. The photo is taken from inside one of the incident locations, during the robbery.

On Thursday, Jan. 14, at 1 p.m., inside 2501 Grand Concourse (Marshalls) in Fordham Manor, the man entered the location, placed store merchandise in a bag and attempted to leave without paying. When approached by a 48-year-old male security guard, the man displayed a knife, threatened the employee, and fled on foot to parts unknown. No injuries were reported. The property removed had an estimated value of $280.

On Tuesday, Jan. 26, at 5 p.m., inside 50 West 225th Street, (Marshalls) in Marble Hill, the suspect entered the location, once again placed store merchandise in a bag, and attempted to leave without paying. When the security guard approached him, he, once again, displayed a knife, threatened the employee, and fled on foot to parts unknown. No injuries were reported. The property removed had an estimated value of $150. The suspect is described as male, 25-35 years of age.

Indoor Dining Slowly Returns in Bedford Park

By DAVID GREENE

Following the return of indoor dining at 25 percent of normal restaurant capacity, on Friday, Feb. 12, at least one Bedford Park restaurant owner is hopeful that it’s a sign of things slowly, and hopefully, returning to normal.

Maria Torres is the manager of Bedford Café and Restaurant, located at 1 Bedford Park Boulevard, which, until last Friday, had been closed since Gov. Andrew Cuomo issued the executive “PAUSE” order on March 20, 2020. The order restricted all, on-premises consumption of food and beverages at eating and drinking establishments, statewide.

Eleven months later, on Tuesday, Feb. 16, Torres was asked how business was now going at Bedford Café since the latest phase of indoor dining recommenced. She told the Norwood News, “Yes, we are excited about it.” She said that business was not like they expected it to be, however. “It’s a whole process,” she said.

According to the manager, people don’t yet feel 100 percent comfortable returning to dine in public. “Even if we do the cleaning, and everything, and follow all the procedures, the seniors have no plans for coming back,” she said.

“We are hopeful,” Torres continued. “Now, with the vaccine and all that, things are going to start getting, little by little, back to normal, and people are going to, again, get used to being back and feeling comfortable, and see that we are doing all the cleaning, and all the measures to keep everyone healthy. So, one day things are going to go back to more interaction, like it used to be.”

Torres said she hasn’t seen any customers since the pandemic first hit, and did not reopen even when indoor dining returned for a brief duration last year. Referring to her regulars, she said, “Even now that we’ve opened indoors, they haven’t come back in.” She added, “They don’t feel comfortable to come out of their apartments. We serve a lot of elderly people, so they are more careful, and I understand that. So, most get it delivered.”

Nonetheless, perhaps because it was St. Valentine's Day, every other table at the restaurant was occupied when the Norwood News visited the restaurant on Sunday, Feb. 14.

Meanwhile, on Sunday morning, at the National Restaurant and Coffee Shop on East Bedford Park Boulevard on Sunday, February 14, 2021.

On March 16, 2020, the Norwood News spoke with the manager of another local business in the area, Madden’s Bedford Pub. At the time, the manager had planned and was looking forward to a big St. Patrick’s Day bash the following evening. However, following the issuance of the governor’s PAUSE order, the bar closed that same night, and didn’t open again until the latter part of 2020, at which point the manager had decided to build an outdoor seating section. He did so, however, it quickly got too cold for anyone to eat, drink or even just sit outside. By that stage, the man said he was fearful his business would have to close its doors outright.

Elections 2021: Kevin Pazmino on Community, the Economy & Policing

BY SÍLE MOLONEY

Freelance filmmaker, business owner, and father, Kevin Pazmino, describes himself as someone who has worked hard, evolved, and taken some chances to get to where he's at right now, in life. He acknowledges having avoided government programs which have facilitated his career progression, yet he is opposed to big government. A supporter of former President Donald Trump, he is the latest candidate to join the District 11 City Council race to fill the seat vacated on Dec. 31 by former Councilman Andrew Cohen, and his platform is based around community-based solutions, and community integration.

"The thing is, my campaign is a very, very small campaign," he said. "It's pretty much just me running it, and I'm not taking any cash donations because I'm just really against money in politics. I'm a little different from the other candidates, [who] I believe, are all registered Democrats. I actually am a registered conservative. Ideologically speaking, I lean more right, so I believe in fiscal responsibility."

In this sense, Pazmino advocates for empowering people through lower taxes and less government intervention, knowing "putting more people dependent on the system is the answer." Nonetheless, referring to his own career path into the film business, he said, "I'm the sole provider for our family of six. I have four children. I came up in an industry that isn't very easy to break into, so in the beginnings of my career, we definitely lived paycheck to paycheck."

He added, "We definitely knew how to utilize social services and food stamps to get to the place where I am now, so, I completely understand the need for that. I grew up in a low-income housing so, I understand the need for a lot of these social programs that we have, but I also have gone through it, coming on the other side of it, and learning a trade."

Pazmino said he understands what it means to be empowered, knowing your worth, and having a skill set that can be transferable. "Being a gig worker, after you get through it and establish yourself, it's very empowering. I think a lot of people out there do have those skill sets, who already are community leaders, but just don't realize it yet."

Indeed, he reveres those with an entrepreneurial spirit, citing one example of a local woman he knows who, "Recently, I'm seeing really, really recently saw an opportunity to start a childcare business out of her home. Pazmino did not elaborate on whether the woman was registered, qualified or had been vetted to take care of children.

On the other hand, he is skeptical of large corporate entities and large non-profits, saying he believes there is a lot of mismanagement that takes place within them. When asked if he could share the name of a nonprofit that is being mishandled, he said, "I can't point to one non for profit directly. I wouldn't know. I don't have access to their budgets, and access to see the scale of what they're doing with the funds that they're receiving, how much the funds are actually just donations."

He said some nonprofits do great work. "I would want to keep those businesses. I want to basically work with those people as well, in order to see where they need more help in terms of logistics, and help streamline those issues that they're facing," he said.

The Norwood News mentioned that 501 nonprofits have to file regular reports to the authorities to demonstrate how they use and spend their funding and asked if this provides some level of comfort regarding the mismanagement concerns. Pazmino concurred but suggested there were also alternative ways and means to report on finances.

"I want people to be able to utilize a lot of the same things that the 1 percent utilizes," he said, explaining that while many large corporations donate to philanthropic causes, they do so as a way to write it off against their taxes.

Pazmino favors a similar model for smaller businesses, saying communities know their districts' needs best. Taking the example of food insecurity, he said he believes only a small percentage of "tax subsidies [received by nonprofits] go towards feeding the hungry," and suggests the larger percentage goes towards management salaries.

Referring to such tax subsidies, he favored instead allocating, for example, $100,000 among ten community restaurants and delis so they could lower their prices for the people in the community. Pazmino added that such businesses could then also provide food for the homeless in the area. "They're more worried about what could happen to them if the situation goes awry."

He added, "You have to react to the best of your ability but if someone pulls a gun, at that point, you have to defend yourself." Acknowledging that police work is dangerous, he asked if that is not what police officers signed up for.

He said the officers he talked to would be the first to agree. "But it's when you don't feel supported by the mayor, or forget the mayor, if you don't feel supported by your own superiors, or if you feel like your superiors aren't the ones who are going to be doing the disciplinary action, then that even allows them to kind of be able to do whatever [the superior] tells them to do," he said.

He said he fears if all disciplinary action falls to the City Council, it will lead to a situation where the superiors won't be able to run a proper department, and drive a rift between police management, and the officers in the field. "I feel like it's going to cause more disorganization," he said.

If elected, Pazmino said he's looking to take a hands-on approach to the role. "I'm looking to be in people's neighborhoods. I'm not going to be the type of councilman who is only out there during election season," he said. "It seems to me as if we're going in a certain direction. There are people, like myself, who don't believe in full blown socialism, and I know that the left will disagree with me in terms of saying, 'We're not really trying to do that,' but it's slow and steady."
City Proposes New Computer Center at Old Fordham Library

BY DAWN CLANCY

The City’s department of administrative services (DCAS) has proposed to Bronx Community Board 7 (CB7) to convert the second floor of the currently vacant Old Fordham Library, located at 2556 Bainbridge Avenue in Fordham Manor, into a new computer-based testing and application center (CTAC), to facilitate more opportunities for a wider number of local candidates to apply for City jobs.

At the latest Bronx CB7 housing and land use committee meeting, on Feb. 9, the agency proposed relocating the Bronx’s current CTAC, located at 1932 Arthur Avenue in Crotona, to the Fordham Library location, and judging from the discussion that ensued, the committee appeared to broadly support the project outline, at this stage.

In all five boroughs, CTACs are community-based centers used for the purpose of taking civil service exams. “Our centers are the start of the pathway to employment with the City,” said Barbara Dannenberger, DCAS’s deputy commissioner for human capital, during the committee meeting. “It’s a place where folks come in and chat with our knowledgeable staff and learn what jobs the City has to offer.” She added, “I think we have every job in the City of New York except for astronaut.”

Moving the Arthur Avenue CTAC to the Fordham Library location is expected to double the annual number of applicants served by the center in the Bronx. The Arthur Avenue location, which comprises 5,100 sq. ft. of surface area, currently accommodates 40 workstations, facilitating 1,900 test-takers per month.

The 10,000 sq. ft. second-floor Fordham Library space would double the capacity of workstations to 80, increasing the number of monthly available test slots to 3,800.

“The new center is a wonderful location for folks to come and visit for the purpose of taking civil service examinations,” said Dannenberger. “It’s near the B, D and 4 trains, the Metro North and many bus routes.”

If approved, construction on the building, which has sat mostly vacant since it was shut down in 2005, could begin at the new center in 2024 and would be completed by 2026. It was noted that the two-story, 24,000 sq. ft. Fordham Library would require building-wide electrical, heating, ventilation and air conditioning (HVAC) upgrades.

Because the building, which was built in 1923, was designated eligible under the National Register of Historic Places, any changes to it would have to be approved by the State’s historical preservation office. Norwood News asked DCAS if the approval had been obtained, and we were informed that such approvals would be received prior to construction.

When asked by committee member, Sandra Erickson, why the project wouldn’t start until 2024, Carmine Rivetti, chief of staff for DCAS, explained, “We have to go through the whole ULURP, Uniform Land Use Procedure process, and that will take 12 to 18 months. From there, you have to go through the design process, and the construction documents. We’re talking about the full scope of work from start to finish.”

The ULURP process is due to commence in either early spring of 2021 or late winter.

According to DCAS, the first floor and mezzanine level of the library is slated to provide services that will benefit the Bronx community, although, currently, there are no plans or proposals as to what these services will entail.

In this context, committee member, Barbara Stronczek, asked, “Who will decide what goes in there, and will you listen to community input as to what goes there?” She added, “We’ve been talking about the site for many years. We always spoke about some type of a youth center. I’m wondering who’s going to make the final decision?”

The Norwood News previously reported that in July 2013, the City released a request for redevelopment proposals for the library. Its closure at the time coincided with the opening of the Bronx Library Center, two blocks away, and local advocates had called for the building to be turned into some kind of community center to cater to youth and seniors, something the immediate area lacked.

The prevailing request for proposal (RFP) called for developers to reactivate the site through potential, “neighborhood-serving purposes.” The RFP also called for the project to be “financially feasible” and to have a “reliable revenue stream.”

In 2008, the City turned the old library over to the City’s health department, which was mandated to turn it into a full-service animal shelter. That mandate was dropped in 2011 by the City Council, and the agency had been using the facility for administrative and storage purposes, according to the RFP.

The Norwood News asked NCAS to clarify when the management of the building had been moved from the health department to NCAS, and we were informed this happened in December 2013.

Before the health department took over the running of the building, two different groups - Sistas and Brother United, the youth arm of the Northwest Bronx Community and Clergy Coalition, and New Life International Church, led by pastor and current 14th District Councilman Fernando Cabrera - staged multiple rallies urging the City to turn the building, which is in District 15, over for community use.

Bronx Borough President Ruben Diaz, Jr. told the NY Daily News, in 2009, he wanted to see some kind of science and technology center or a recreational hub at the former library.

Meanwhile, then-Bronx Councilman Joel Rivera, representing the 15th District, and son of Assemblyman José Rivera, said at the time, a private-public partnership might have been an option, but added that the City would best be served in the long-term by using the old library for developing young people and providing programming to keep them off the streets.

“In a private development, you might get 50 jobs out of it in the short term,” he said at the time. “But in the long term, with a community center, you can develop a whole generation of young people.”

At the CB7 meeting, Rivetti said DCAS was open to suggestions from the community regarding the building’s usage. “We’ve engaged with the borough president’s office, and there’s a council race coming up [District 15 special election on March 23]. So, we look forward to having that discussion with the new council member as well,” he said.

“If there’s a community center that people want to explore, we’re open to all possibilities. We’ll have this discussion with all the stakeholders as we go through the ULURP process.”

Other suggestions from the community for the first-floor space include a job training center. Committee member, Edgar Ramos, said, “Since you can take civil service tests on the second floor, that might be a good co-use for the building.”

Regarding the project’s next steps, Nick Benson, DCAS director of communications, emailed the Norwood News, writing, “The ULURP process will include several public hearings, including one with the CB7. Once we have ULURP approval, we would start the design work.”

No formal request for approval or non-objection to the project was asked of the committee by DCAS, and the presentation was really more of a heads up of what is being planned. As the agency advances with the ULURP process, it plans to engage with all affected stakeholders which includes, we understand, coming back to CB7 for a nod of approval, at a later stage, regarding the project’s progression.

Other items discussed at the meeting included an update on the New York Botanical Garden’s (NYBG) plan for two new housing developments at East Bedford Park Boulevard and Webster Avenue, part of a 2011 re-zoning plan to revitalize 88 blocks of Webster Avenue. As reported by Norwood News, residents are concerned about the project’s overall impact on local amenities like schools and parking. NYBG is slated to present its plans to the CB7 community at next month’s housing meeting, scheduled for Tuesday, March 9, at 6:30 pm.

Letters To The Editor

Erosion of Women’s Rights
I invite my fellow Norwoodites to borrow the book, “Prey: Immigration, Islam and the Erosion of Women’s Rights” by Ayaan Hirsi Ali from the library. The eye-opening story of the flood of refugees from Syria and Iraq shows that 80 percent are males under the age of 35. These refugees are coming into countries such as Germany in Europe, and are bringing with them, customs of polygamy, patriarchy and the view of women as commodities.

The author notes that they see no need to change their views even when living in Western Europe. As such, there are areas in Europe where women are told not to frequent to avoid the risk of sexual assault. Sadly, the courts and police maintain a culture of political correctness, and probable guilt over their role in WWII, and treat these refugees with kid gloves when they are caught assaulting women. No one gets extradited back to where they came from, since they can claim asylum.

I relate this book and its story because I am observing a mistaken political climate right now where there are calls to defund the police and release criminals. Only a fool would say our police stopped a parked bus in Brooklyn loaded with teens - primarily males - and eight guns were seized, and 14 people were arrested. Every morning the local TV news shows reports of a shooting in the Bronx - sadly mostly fatal. Yet no one

Subway Fare Evasion & Crime
How should we deal with fare evasion, vandalism and crime on NYC Transit subway and buses? Perhaps it is time to return to the good old days when a transit police officer was assigned to ride and patrol most stations and trains. This, along with installation of security cameras on trains, and at stations, might serve as a deterrent against crime, fare evasion and vandalism. There, also, may be the need to increase fines and penalties as a deterrent for those who don’t pay their fare, commit crime or vandalism.

Health Check: Your Healthy Heart

By SAKINAH LONG

When we think about February, most of us think about Valentine’s Day hearts. But February is also American Heart Month - a good time to give your own heart a check-up. Heart disease is the number one cause of death in the United States, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

The good news, though, is that you can do many things to help prevent heart disease. First, it’s important to understand your chances of having or getting it. Second, you can learn what changes may help reduce your odds of getting heart disease.

According to the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute (NHLBI), your chance of heart disease is higher with one or more of the following:

• high blood pressure
• high cholesterol
• obesity
• smoking
• stress
• unhealthy eating habits
• diabetes or prediabetes
• family history of heart disease

While you can’t change your family history, many of these risk factors can be reduced by some simple adjustments.

Heart-Healthy Foods
Your diet can make a big difference. A heart-healthy diet includes plenty of fruits and vegetables and whole grains like oatmeal and brown rice. Try to add foods high in healthy fats like omega-3 fats e.g. salmon and sardines. Reduce added sugars, especially in processed foods, and saturated fats like bacon and cold cuts. Stick with lean ground beef and skinless chicken or turkey to cut down on saturated fats. And choose fat-free and low-fat milk, cheese, and yogurt.

Get Moving
Regular physical activity can help you lose weight, lower your stress, and improve your mental health. It can also help lower “bad” cholesterol levels and may lower high blood pressure. Speak with your doctor about how much, and what types of physical activities are safe for you. Every little bit of physical activity counts, including things like housework or gardening.

Lowering Stress
Research from the NHLBI has suggested that upsetting events can trigger a heart attack in some people. Too much stress may increase blood pressure, raising the risk of heart disease. Everyone experiences stress, so it is important to be aware of when and how it affects you. Talking to a professional counselor, meditating, exercising, and talking to friends and family can help lower your stress levels.

Smoking
Smoking greatly increases your chance of heart disease and heart attacks. If you or anyone you live with smokes, you and they should quit. If you have trouble quitting smoking on your own, speak to your doctor about joining a support group. Many hospitals, workplaces, and community groups offer classes too.

Keeping your heart beating strong and healthy is important all year. So, take a little time during American Heart Month to learn how to take care of your heart; a few simple changes can make a big difference. COVID-19 Vaccine

New York City officials are aiming to make COVID-19 vaccines available to most New Yorkers by mid-March 2021. Most people, like health care workers, those over 65, people at increased risk of severe COVID-19, teachers, school staff, childcare workers, Department of Corrections staff, first responders, public transit workers, grocery store workers and those working and living in group homes and homeless shelters can get vaccinated. Residents are encouraged to get vaccinated, as doing so helps protect the community at large. People with disabilities should take precautions and consult with their health care provider first. To find out more information, text “COVID” to your health care provider, call 311, or text 311-692. TTY service for people with disabilities is also available by dialing (212) 504-4115. NYC Campaign Finance Board Ranked Choice Voting will be used in all Special Elections taking place after January 3, 2021. The first special election with Ranked Choice Voting in District 11 and District 15 will be held on March 23, 2021.

Ranked Choice Voting means a voter can rank up to five candidates in order of preference, instead of choosing just one. If a candidate receives more than 50 percent of first-choice votes, they will win the election. If no candidate earns more than 50 percent of first-choice votes, then the counting will continue in rounds. At the end of each round, the candidate with the fewest votes will be eliminated.

If a voter ranked the eliminated candidate as their first choice, then the voter’s next highest ranked candidate on their ballot will be taken into account. This process will continue until there are two candidates left. The candidate with the most votes wins. More information on ranked choice voting can be found here: by dialing (917)920-0690; by emailing nycvotes@nyccbf.org; or by calling 212-490-1680.

fun of her hair, her weight, her looks, her style, and zeroed in on her for just about anything, until it all became too much.

"All I can recall is the amount of crying I did after repeated episodes," she wrote. "She turned classmates against me, and I felt worthless. When she picked on me, none of the other kids ever stood up for me, and I remember feeling so lonely." A visit with her mother to the school principal caused the situation to escalate and eventually, Blumenthal ended up leaving the school. While she subsequently made new friends and the painful memories faded, the scars remained.

Twenty years later, in 2018, Blumenthal decided to create the Hat Not Hate initiative, after seeing a then, 9-year-old girl who was being bullied but who decided to speak out about it.

On Thursday, Feb. 11, the bubbly, smiling founder and activist was at P.S. 294, Walton Avenue School, in the Mt Eden section of the Bronx to make a donation of 500 of the organization’s signature, blue, knit hats to students. The aim was to bring awareness to an issue, which according to the National Bullying Prevention Center, affects one if five kids across the country.

The school’s principal, Nicole Perkins, and second grade teacher, Elisa D’Aguanno, who was the driver behind the initiative, were outside the building, located on 1425 Walton Avenue, to accept the donation, along with a handful of kids whose parents had provided authorization to be interviewed.

Though they were a bit camera-shy in the end, and didn’t say much, the kids seemed excited by the occasion, happy to receive the hats, and also seemed to take in the message imparted by Blumenthal, who looked each one in the eye, and told them they were seen, they were heard and they were loved.

One little girl, who seemed, perhaps, to be wearing a religious headscarf underneath her knit hat, seemed a little more shy than the others and, later, kept close to Blumenthal’s side as she spoke with reporters.

The #HatNotHate campaign had forged a close relationship with the school’s staff, through D’Aguanno and when they expressed an urgent need for warm hats for their students during the cold winter months, it was a win-win situation. A number of the students live in shelters and were also in need of warm clothing. #HatNotHate saw the opportunity to help the students, while also spreading a message of solidarity and anti-bullying awareness.

October marks National Bullying Prevention Awareness Month, and the blue hats are usually donated to schools to coincide with that month. However, school closures amid the pandemic upended the normal routine.

Lion Brand Yarn Company, where Blumenthal serves as a brand ambassador for the last five years, helped launch the Hat Not Hate initiative, while the concept itself was conceived by Blumenthal. The idea was to get knitters and crocheters to knit and crochet blue hats and donate them to the cause. Blue represents awareness and solidarity and is the color to wear in support of bullying prevention. To date, more than 32,000 wool hats have been collected for this year’s #HatNotHate campaign with an extended goal of 100,000 for 2021.

The Norwood News asked Perkins how the school got involved with the campaign. She said D’Aguanno has a business where she crochets and knits. “Ms Deguano asked me if she can sponsor P.S. 294 to launch this program with our kids,” Perkins said. “It’s such an important initiative and I was like, ‘Yes!’”

She said the second and fifth graders are going to pilot the program. “We figure, our second graders, they have a couple more years before they graduate, so this will be a great initiative for them to push through the school in the upcoming year, and I hope to continue a connection with them, and they can really wear their hats with pride, showing that they are a part of this anti-bullying program.”

Perkins continued, “The fifth graders, they can wear their hats moving forward into middle school, and they can always remember that as they’re going into this new phase of schooling, that’s not what we want to do. We want to make sure we treat people with respect and talk to them with respect.”

Asked about specific state and city policies and guidelines for schools in terms of how to handle bullying, Perkins said, “There is a DOE [Department of Education] program which we call, ‘Respect for All’ for which Ms D’Aguanno is the liaison.”

She said they also have additional initiatives, where they educate kids about not bullying people based on race or other reasons. “That’s part of our building safe design,” she said.

We asked Perkins if bullying is a serious problem at the school and if kids, generally, come forward if they’ve been bullied. “You know, being, at first, I was assistant principal here, and now being a principal, we had had instances, but the thing is, sometimes students feel like a one-time occurrence is bullying,” she said.

“In those instances, it wasn’t really bullying. It may have been just a verbal thing, like, a name they didn’t like, or they said something about what they were eating or something like that. Once you explain the term, what bullying is, my students usually realize that that’s not the case.”

She said they explain to students that a parent can perhaps say something mean one day, but that bullying is an ongoing issue that is something different.

“So, it hasn’t been an ongoing thing, thankfully, not too much here at P.S. 294,” she said. “The ongoing incident is something that, as soon as a child says that, or uses the word ‘bullying,’ it has been my mindset to always investigate, have a mediation with the children, talk about it, have a mediation with the parents, so that’s something that lives within P.S. 294.”

For her part, D’Aguanno said that because she is a teacher, she has to help children feel safe, feel empowered, feel loved, and know that if they are bullied, they have options, and don’t have to use their hands. “Our school is very open, and we do a lot of communicating. We have wonderful staff and psychologists and we really work with the kids and meet them one on one, and have play groups and talk groups,” she said. “So, if there is an instance, we handle it right away, but I would say our school is definitely safe.”

The National Bullying Prevention Center (NBPC) found that bullying can result in depression, alcohol abuse and even suicide in some people. Cyberbullying has also doubled from 2007 to 2019.

Speaking at the event, Blumenthal said she never wants another child to feel the way that she did as a child. She added that because the hats are soft and warm, they may also bring an extra level of comfort and warmth to a bullied child when they put one on.

“While every kid may not be bullied, there is bullying happening all the time, whether we want to see it or not,” she said. “I always say that there’s always someone in a room that has been bullied, witnessed bullying, or been a bully, and I just hope that with these blue hats, we can bring light to the issue.”

Blumenthal added that there’s no better feeling than receiving something that is handmade. “I hope that these kids are going to feel that and hopefully they’ll tell their friends, and their friends will tell their friends, ‘How do I get one of those blue hats?’ So, that’s my dream. That’s my wish, and Elisa heard me, and the Walton School accepted this concept with open arms.”
